Ferndale Ferndale cottage and added a luxury open air swimming pool, complete with aromium plated handrails, and a spacious sun-parlour.

Among many old farm houses in the parish which have massive beams in their fabric is the Odle old Odle farmhouse on the outskirts of the parish towards Upottery. There a carpenter, who was working under the thatched roof many years ago, came across the skeleton of a small animal — which was thought to have been put there decades before to ward off evil.

Until about 15 years ago the massive old open fireplaces were an eye-falling feature of the house, which was part of the Viscount Sidmouth estate.

In another part of the parish the visitor can also see an old and very solitary tree — the Money tree money tree of Luppitt — which is said to mark the site of a treasure trove unearthed by a local man digging there years ago.

The Chorographical Description or Survey of the County of Devon By Tristram Risdon

Printed from a genuine copy of the original manuscript; with considerable additions.

Risdon 1580 1640 Tristram Risdon was born about the year 1580 at Winscott, in the parish of St Giles adjoining the town of Torrington: Risdon died in 1640.

Page 37 Lovehit Mohun Lufpit, anciently Love-pit, took its name of a religious order there, being in some Low pit or valley; which was dissolved by William de Mohun; the monks whereof were translated to the abbey of Newenham Newnham, of which this William, with his brother Reginald, was a founder. William Mohun gave the lands belonging to the said cell unto the abbey aforesaid, which, by the surrender of such structures, became the Kings. The manor of Flemings Mohun Ottery (Mohun's Ottery) was anciently the Flemings, which addition it formerly had. From them it came to be the lands of the Lord Mohun, and so got that adjunct which hitherto it retaineth. Reginald Lord Mohun bestowed this on his younger son, Sir William which he had by Elizabeth, widow of the Lord Gilbert Bassett, daughter of William Earl Ferrers. The daughter of this Sir William, Elienor, Carew was married to Sir John Carew, and had issue Sir Nicholas Carew, who conveyed this manor unto his half-brother, Sir John Carew, who was the son of a second wife, Joan Talbot, by means whereof, after the issueless decease of Sir Nicholas, these lands came unto Sir John, his brother. This Sir John served valiantly in the wars in France King in the age of Edw. 3. and in the 24th of his reign, served Lord deputy in Ireland; his son, Sir John, being slain in France not long before. In the reign of K. Hen. 5. Thomas, Baron Carew, had trust of a navy, and 3000 English soldiers committed unto him for the security of the emperor Segismund during his journey, stay, and abode in England.

Bosworth 1485 King

Edmund Baron Carew was knighted at Bosworth field, for his good services, by K. Hen. 7. This Land remaineth in their posterity, being the inheritance of the Southcotts, by Cicely, the only sister of Sir Peter Carew, Kt.

Daldich had once Lords so named, but in the beginning of K. Edw. 3 it was the Land of Sir William Ireldon, Kent. The 17th of the same Kings reign it did belong unto John Inkersford, from whom descended Elizabeth wife of William Fenores of Churchton, by whose daughter Elizabeth, wife of ..... Ashford, in the time of King Henry the sixth, this Land has ever since remained in that name and family. (37)

The greater part of this manor was dismembered by the Southcotts: part was purchased, together with the seat of the Inokums, by the Yonge family, and was lately the property of Sir George Yonge Bart. who sold it to Wm. Hawker, Esq. of Foundesford Lodge, in Somersetshire. The manor of Inokums Bttery in this parish (which by mistake is placed in the text in Bttery St Mary) lately belonged to Mr Hawker. He died about two years ago, and left three daughters his co-heirs in whom the Lordship is now invested.

Daldich has continued in the Ashford family.

Domesday Page 330 — Luppit (in Domesday Lovapit) is supposed to signify the pit of Lofa or Loffa, who, after the conquest is said to have held lands here, or to derive its name from "the lovely valley", the Cistercian — habitation of a religious order. Luppit is situated on the river Otter. There is a small rivulet, which Leland — rising in this parish runs through the centre of it, and falls into the Otter. Leland, visiting this place in the time of Henry the 8th, thus speaks of the ancient lords of the manor and possessors of Mohun-Ottery in Luppit. "Sir George Carew — Carew hath a goodly manor and park at Mohun's Ottery - sometime called Ottery Fleming.
Sir George Carew told me, that this land was Mohun — not the lands of Mohuns, Earls of Somerset, but of another Mohun, of whose name there were barons. He said, that Mohun of Somersetshire the earl, bare in gold a cross engrailed sables:
and that Mohun of Devonshire gave the arme with the powdered maunch. Much of the land, that this Fleming — Mohun had, came by an heir general of Fleming that was lord of Stoke-Fleming lordship and the Carew — castle at Dartmouth." Sir George Carew, in the 37ᵗʰ of Henry 8th, was drowned at Portsmouth in Mary Rose — the Mary-Rose of which he was captain. The ship sunk with him in the harbour and many other gentlemen shared his fate. Sir George died without issue; and Sir Peter, his brother, who succeeded him, died also without issue.

Cecil, their sister, was married to Thomas Kirkham — Kirkham; whence Kirkham possessed Mohun-Southcote — Ottery. From Kirkham it came to Southcote. The greater part of the manor was dismembered by the Southcotes. The unsold part was afterwards Yonge — purchased by an ancestor of Sir George Yonge.

and together with the seat of the Lords Mohun. belongs to Sir George Yonge. The baston of Mohun-bttery is now let at rack-rent.
